TREASON BY MISINFORMATION

"ENGINEERING OF CONSENT" MORE POWERFUL THAN BOMBS OR MIGHTY ARMIES

Republished from MARAH, INC.,
Box 2223, Palm Beach, Florida

"The Free World is dying of a lie, of the most unforgivable sin, according to our Christian creed; the sin against the Spirit; to know the truth and to ignore it. To know the creeping, deadly, universal advance of the Nameless Beast and to deny its omnipresence. If we try to find through those 47 years of dire experience what has been the principal auxiliary of Communism's continuous advance . . . we will unavoidably find it in treacherously organized misinformation, directed and co-ordinated from some mysterious headquarters, through many hidden or notorious channels, but whose principal vehicle is the so-called Free Press."

We shall not identify the speaker of the above words, other than to remark that he once served as Foreign Minister of a country that was destroyed, not by bombs or bullets, but by lies and what he called "treasonable misinformation."

Walter Cronkite may have committed career suicide when he said much the same thing, but in milder words in a speech to the Inland Press Association at Chicago. He charged that, under the label of "news management," we are being fed lies. He cited Viet Nam and tax cuts as typical examples of administration dishonesty. He said that honesty in government has become old-fashioned. A government official once declared that it is the right of government to lie. That alleged right now seems to have become a duty and an obligation. And, with a few note-worthy exceptions, it has become the rule of the so-called Free Press to expand and enlarge upon those lies; and add to the dishonesty by seeking new and bigger lies on their own to spread from coast to coast.

The Vietnamese horror is a case in point. In the beginning this was a two-bit brush-fire that could and should have been put out in a matter of weeks. But, for reasons which have never been made known to the public, it has become a crisis that can be discussed in terms of a potential World War Three!

Shall we review the propaganda build-up?

This was an unpopular undeclared war. People just couldn't understand why American boys should be dying in a so-called fight against Communist expansion in some rice paddies eight thousand miles away, when nobody was fighting to halt Communist expansion ninety miles away. There had to be some first-class public relations work done, and done fast, to win public support for this war. And it was decided, and correctly, that the best way to obtain support from right-thinking Americans, was to get left-thinking Americans against the war.

A great leader of the left-thinkers was—and is—Senator Wayne Morse of Oregon. So, months before anybody even thought of burning a draft card, Morse produced ream upon ream of material condemning what he called "McNamara's War," most of the material being gathered from articles appearing in the so-called Free Press, or sent to him by left-thinking groups and individuals; all of which was accepted for publication in issue after issue of the Congressional Record.

MASTER OF DECEIT

ROBERT S. McNAMARA, Secretary of Defense under JFK and LBJ, perhaps the most brazen exponent of treason in government today. Time and again McNamara has been under fire for mis-statements, half-truths, if not outright lies. Adam Yarmolinsky, Zionist, who recently left the Defense Dept. was considered his boss.

This is the peculiar fact that no one seemed to comprehend: Morse and McNamara are team-mates and political bed-fellows. That they could—seriously and honestly—disagree on the matter of foreign policy, is almost incomprehensible. Yet, disagree they did, the only logical conclusion being that they agreed to disagree for the purpose of creating a crisis. In bread-and-circus politics, a circus act was needed to go along with LBJ's bread distribution (war against poverty). So, Vietnam became the arena, our sons the gladiators, and thanks to television, radio and the so-called Free Press, we all have tickets to the performances.

McNamara plays his part well by making spasmodic trips to the Far East, returning to give us a new batch of misinformation each time.

But the public-at-large continued to grow restless, demanded honest answers and got none. LBJ began losing his "consensus," even the labor unions began criticizing his policies, and longshoremen began refusing to load boats.

LBJ went to Honolulu for a "summit," HHH went to the East to assure the world that the sun still rises. And yet another bed-fellow and team-mate, William Fulbright, called for nationally televised Senate discussions of the Vietnamese War. And the sole result has been an avalanche of misinformation and half-truth. As of this writing, there has been one area of agreement: LBJ and Bobby Kennedy have agreed that if and when a stable government is possible in Vietnam, the Communists shall have their fair share in that government (George Marshall and Harry Truman made the same agreement in regard to China, and Chiang Kai-shek was exiled to the Isle of Taiwan.)

It should be recalled that Senator Fulbright, in the notorious "memorandum" that bore his name, propounded the maxim that the people were too dumb to share in decision-making, and that they should never be told too much about any critical problem of national interest. Yet, it was this same Fulbright who engineered the televised Senate Committee hearings on Vietnam.

TREASON BY MISINFORMATION?

The Red Intramural Struggle

Perhaps the height of misinformation has been achieved in the much publicized thesis that the Red Russians and the Red Chinese are at each other's figurative throats. Slowly and surely, through carefully calculated and treasonable misinformation, we have come (generally) to believe that Russia and China have become bitter and irreconcilable enemies. It has even come to be "common knowledge" that if and when a Third World War comes to the "all out" phase, Russia and the United States will be on the same side, fighting against Red China.

Yet, when we are able to obtain undistorted news we always find that Russia and
